UHL STORE

San Antonio, Bexar County, Texas.

Owner: Mrs. Clara UhlDate of Erection: 1855Architect: UnknownBuilder: UnknownPresent Condition: FairNumber of Stories: OneMaterials of Construction: Limestone, adobe, stucco, and plaster, woods are pine and cypress.Other Existing Records: NoneAdditional Data:

This store, located in the heart of an early German settlement of San Antonio, consists of five rooms. The construction indicates that it was built at different periods. The first part is about three feet higher than the remainder of the building, and has small rectangular louveres at either end. The windows are twelve light and are equipped with out swinging blinds.

The pitched roof, formerly shingled, is now covered with a standing seam galvanized iron roof. The rooms have canvas ceilings, which method of ceiling was very common of that period. The floors are of one inch random width, tongue and groove pine.

The Architectural style is typically Early Texas, the almost exact counterparts of which may be seen in the towns of New Braunfels, Seguin, Castroville, D'Hanis, Comfort, Fredericksburg, and Kerrville, which roughly takes in territory within a hundred mile radius.

Information was received from Mrs. Clara Uhl of San Antonio, Texas.
